AUTISTIC PRIDE DAY

Event guide

Let people decide what works for them before they arrive.

Pick the day and format

18 June is Autistic Pride Day, and any day works. Choose a short talk, a lunch, a reading of the six actions or a discussion of one action.

Publish what will happen, when it starts, how long it runs and where it takes place. Keep private addresses out of a public listing.

Tell people what to expect

Quiet space: say whether there is somewhere to step away.

Light and noise: explain the room before people arrive.

Step free access: explain how people get in and around.

Captions: say what is available for talks, online and in the room.

Come and go: explain whether people can leave and return.

Communication: offer ways to take part without speaking. For online events, say whether cameras are optional.

Invite and list it

Use a clear invitation with the format, length, location and access information. Give people a way to ask for what they need.

Add the event to the campaign list. Tell us what, where and when, and what people can expect. Events are listed after a check.

Afterwards

Record what you did and what it led to. If your organisation made a commitment, report the actions and outcomes. Ask people what helped and what should change next time.
